You mean like the guy you quoted who, after I explained the obvious-to-many intent of writing absurd things over and over again with a link to what I think is the most important thing I've written, agreed with my reasoning and said so? And who likes my work? You need to be reading these Tweets carefully, or not at all. You said the same thing about David House because some random guy on the internet said it, and in this case the guy changed his initial view, and obviously several other very notable people like Biella Coleman and dozens of others have retweeted them, and my point was made. You get these things wrong sometimes, in part because it's hard to see all the different responses, in part because you love me and are concerned about me messing things up. I've told you this before, so I'd appreciate it if you'd really consider it rather than just responding "PANIC" to so many things.
